ABSTRACT

The article presents a list of funerary cones, which were not included in one of the last collections of the material. These objects were mainly collected from auctions, and the aim is to make these cones available for scholars.

Introduction

Funerary cones are known from various places in Egypt, but were almost exclusively used as elements of decoration on tombs of the Theban area during the New Kingdom and the 26th dynasty. These objects made of clay were placed over the entrance of the tombchapel. The base of the cones is normally inscribed with the title and the name of the tomb-owner, some examples are also inscribed with short prayers. The first summary of the material was published by De Garis-Davies & MacAdam (1957), who registered all of the known examples. In recent times, two more compendiums were published, namely by Dibley & Lipkin (2009) under the title 'A Compendium of Egyptian Funerary Cones' and with 'The Complete Funerary Cones' by Zenihiro (2009). Furthermore, many funerary cones were published in various excavation publications or special research items, which were included in the aforementioned books that were published in 2009. Up to date, more than six hundred objects of the various types of funerary cones are known.¹

The database 'The World of Funerary Cones' established by Zenihiro is a useful tool to find specific objects and to work with the whole material.² Especially through the references to every known type of funerary cone,³ we are able to have the whole material at glance, especially titles, names and institutions mentioned on them. Through a list of all the museums holdings of the various funerary cones, Zenihiro provides scientists with a perfect source

The entries of the funerary cones were entered according to the following layout, to present a quick overview of each cone. To enable the comparison with the older compendia of funerary cones, the numbers of the entries from the older compendia of De Garis-Davies & MacAdam, Dibley & Lipkin as well as Zenihiro are used as the main entry.

a private collection. It can not be excluded that some of the objects have found their ways into a collection of a museum. Hopefully the subsequent list of funerary cones can be useful for further research on this sort of funerary layout.
